

ABOUT THIS BOOK

In the year 2035 when handguns are like toothbrushes, everyone has one... a team of techno scientist set out to help law enforcement better control hostage situations and shot outs with an iphone app that when activated will cause any handgun fired in the vicinity of an iphone carried by the shooter to return to the persons gun that fired it.

The app dials the iphone and creates an electronic signature for 24 hours that can be traced. When one of the apps creators leaves the group of developers to create his own version of the app and then sell it to the highest bidders so he can ultimately sell an UnApp to law enforcement. The remaining team members launch a law suit to and get an injunction to cease all production of his product. But the rouge team member has a upgraded prototype and goes after each of the former team members one by one... Key to the story is when the mechanical engineer who did the original design work on the app, is solicited by the police to help Det. Randolph Ricketts stop the further sale of sample apps to criminal elements...
