

ABOUT THIS BOOK

This study guide attempts to provide an understanding of what believers should consider when they meet non-believers who raise concerns about hypocrisy within the church as it applies to church leaders. And it offers further understanding from which to draw from when addressing other believers frustration with the same concern.

Reports on dwindling church attendance in these troubled times are concerning however it is something to be expected prior to the returning of Christ. Believers must understand that we are not perfect but willing to be perfected. This is the same plight church leadership experiences as well. With that while we all would like to think that our church leaders can be considered disciples of God and fully committed to that designation we must remember that all of us are imperfect and striding towards perfection so in the pages below there are reminders of the requirements necessary to be designated a disciple in Gods eyes.

Finally for those of us who have yet to grow into that commitment of discipleship in the event we do not make it there is still hope for entry into Heaven and examples are provided.
