

ABOUT THIS BOOK

Rodgers Corbin political has been, uses his last bit of charisma to borrow a former benefactors yacht to sail off into oblivion. Leaving his wife of almost 50 years holding the bag and the insurance policies until he can figure out how to get back alive. His first mistake was drinking and boating, the second mistake was drinking and boating in uncharted waters. His trip back to his home country took a horrible turn for the worse when he found himself over 1,000 miles off course in a cove on La Blanquilla Island. An island that was only visible during the month of July.

Once there things only got worst until Rodgers uncovered the island inhabitants age old secret, their ability to steal identities. That was when things really got interesting. Before he knew it Rodgers was caught up in a deadly competition between secret federal agency's were the term missing person is used like paper cups at the water fountain. And as the smooth operator Rodgers Corbin was he figured out how to get exactly what he wanted and how to leave everyone else wanting.

But before Rodgers death two things were clear once your identity has been stolen there is no way to get it back and secondly there really is, new life after death.
