

ABOUT THIS BOOK

John Mason is playing the game of multi-million dollar monopoly and he is only six key properties away from winning. It has taken him 18 years of wheeling and dealing to get to this point and the only thing that could stop him was time, something he was quickly running out of.

Now a special election to fill an untimely City Council seat vacancy was just announced. And John realized that his parking garage empire maybe doomed to fail before it even got started. City Councilman Mark Oliver's seat was just abruptly vacated and a special election to replace him has been set for this coming September 30th less then 6 months away. John knows that without Mark Oliver on the City Council all chances for the development of a new sports stadium will die and so would the possibilities for his parking lot empire along with the almost $40 million dollars in increase real estate values for properties he had already purchased. All of John's hard work and time spent picking up properties surrounding the site for the new stadium would be for not.

John Mason the Private Parking Lot King of New York City is now desperate.

But this crown will only be a fawn memory if John doesn't secure the purchase rights to the last six properties before the special election. Follow John's master plan to secure those last six properties by making the owners a final take it or leave it offer via special delivery mail.

The problem is each of the six property owners keep turning up dead and no one knows why. This is one of Marshal Harry Bailey's most baffling cases and just when he catches on to the why and the who, the mastermind winds up dead.

Sit back and follow this investigative nightmare entitled the case of the Deadly Mailman and see if you can figure out what kind of parcels John Mason is really having delivered.
